INTERESTING POINT OF LAW.

A very interesting point of law came up this week in the case of Harry G. Taylor against Ogden City. David Eccles, et al. Mr. Taylor filed through a basement door in the sidewalk of the Eccles building, suffering injuries. He made Mr. Eccles, owner of the property, and Joseph Myers, a saloon keeper, who had leased a portion of the building, defendants to the suit. The point of law was, can a landlord be held responsible for premises or buildings, for damages, if when the property was leased to a tenant it was in good condition. The court sustained the point that when a building or premises is rented and is in good condition when the tenant takes charge that he cannot be held responsible for injury that anyone might sustain by the same getting out of order or repair, but the burden of responsibility rests upon the tenant, and it is his duty to see that the premises or building rented by him is kept in proper condition. This was the contention of Atty. C. C. Richards in the case and the same was upheld by the court.
